During field study students will examine social problems, evaluate the merit of ideas presented in the classroom, and conduct naturalistic observations and investigations while completing a field work internship.

- In class students will discuss pragmatic and professional issues and theoretical concepts associated with their field work.
- At the site students participate in the ongoing activities of an organization, develop interpersonal as well as technical competencies. Depending on the agency and the instructor, students have opportunities for data collection projects, theory-testing, and social intervention.

HELPFUL RESOURCES
• UCI Career Center Workshops & Services: http://www.career.uci.edu/

IMPORTANT POLICIES:

Deadlines:
• Students are responsible for meeting all deadlines.

Minimum Standards:
• Students are required to complete all field study prerequisites prior to enrollment in Social Ecology 195; they must submit a Field Study Course Enrollment Form to the field study coordinator by the established deadline and follow all enrollment procedures. Field study activities must be clearly related to the curriculum in Social Ecology, and paid positions will be carefully screened to ensure the opportunity exists for experiential learning.

• Students are required to complete acceptable field work at their placement site, with a minimum of 25 hours in the field per unit of credit. (Four-unit field studies require 100 hours of field work; eight-unit field studies require 200 hours of field work.) Students are required to submit an evaluation form from their field supervisor verifying completion of field site requirements and assessing the quality of their field work.

• Attendance at regular (weekly or biweekly) meetings with a faculty sponsor is required. Faculty will arrange one hour per week (or biweekly) to meet with field study students in a small group or individually to facilitate the integration of academic and field experiences.

• Students will be required to complete an analytical, academic paper relevant to their area of interest; either a literature review or a data-gathering project in the field placement is suggested. Papers should be approximately ten pages in length and incorporate at least two references to scientific journal articles, legal case studies, etc. Personal journals and descriptive accounts of field placement activities are not appropriate.

• Students enrolled for 8 units of field study credit will be required to complete two field study projects as outlined above or one project at least 20 pages in length and citing four or more academic references.

• Social Ecology faculty may add to the requirements listed above, narrow the range of acceptable projects, or establish additional grading criteria.

Placements & Placement Sites:
• Students must choose a placement site from the list of sites approved by Social Ecology. Placements at sites not listed and/or individual placements will not be approved!

• Students may not change placements after the course enrollment deadline

• New Site Application Information: Agencies and organizations are invited to apply to be a listed field study site. Have them contact the Field Study Director. Sites must be open to all student applications for a minimum of 1 year. The application and approval process to list new sites takes two full quarters from the time the application is received by Social Ecology. For example, sites that apply in the Fall should be listed in time for the Summer Session course enrollment deadline.

• Students may begin field work on or after the 1st date of the placement period. Hours worked before the first day of the placement period will not be credited toward the field work requirement.

Grading
• Field study is graded on a Pass/No Pass basis, based on the supervisor’s evaluation of the student’s fieldwork, student participation in meetings with the faculty sponsor, and the quality of the student’s paper.
